TEXT AND THINKING

On Some Role of Thinking in Text Interpretation 1992.

Preface (VII). Introduction (1). On discourse comprehension and inferencing. 1.1. Introduction (12). 1.2. On co(n)textual information (17). 1.3. On coherence (21). 1.4. On inferences (29). 1.5. On the different kinds of cotext-directed inferencing (35). 1.6. On processing strategies (39). 1.6.1. On the processing stages of graphemic decoding (41). 1.6.2. On the inferential nature of graphemic decoding (45). 1.7. On the supplementation of discourse-directed inferences (48). 1.8. Summary (53). On syntactic inferencing. 2.1. Introduction (55). 2.2. On the realms of syntax (57). 2.3. On singling out syntactic processing (60). 2.4. From graphemic cotext to syntactic cotext (62). 2.5. Inferences based on and going beyond the knowledge of syntax (64). 2.5.1. On ordering syntactic constituents (64). 2.5.2. On ordering single words (66). 2.6. Inferences based on the rules of syntactic ordering (67). 2.7. On pure thought syntax (69). 2.8. On the inferential nature of syntactic processing (71). 2.9. On the interaction of syntactic inferences (73). 2.10. Summary (77). On semantic inferencing. 3.1. Introduction (79). 3.2. On singling out semantic processing (82). 3.3. On ILRRR information (84). 3.4. On ILRRR organization (88). 3.5. On the neuropsychological evidence for ILRRR organization (90). 3.6. On the neurolinguistic evidence for ILRRR organization (91). 3.7. On the lexicalized counterparts of ILRRR information (95). 3.8. On standard meanings and private meanings (99). 3.9. On some conditions of handling ILRRR information (101). 3.10. On the importance and limits of ILRRR information (103). 3.11. Summary (106). On semanticological inferencing. 4.1. Introduction (107). 4.2. On some extrapositional problems (111). 4.3. On predicate assignment and some intrapositional problems (114). 4.4. On some conditions of interpropositional meanings (116). 4.4.1. On the argument identity condition (116). 4.4.2. On the predicate identity condition (118). 4.4.3. On the argument overlap condition (119). 4.4.4. On the predicate overlap condition (119). 4.5. On some global meaning conditions (120). 4.5.1. On the consequence consistency condition (121). 4.5.2. On the topic compatibility condition (122). 4.5.3. On the context integrativity condition (124). 4.6. On contrivance human thinking (126). 4.7. On some limits of logic in interpretation (129). 4.8. On some restraints of rationality (131). 4.9. Summary (136). On action-oriented inferencing. 5.1. Introduction (137). 5.2. On action and its related inferences (141). 5.3. On the need for action-oriented inferences (146). 5.4. Action-oriented inferences made from contextually expressed actions (148). 5.4.1. Inferences oriented to local actions (148). 5.4.2. Inferences oriented to global actions (150). 5.5. Action-oriented inferences made from contextually performed actions (151). 5.6. On mental background activities and action co(n)texts (153). 5.7. On expectations and knowledge schemata (155). 5.8. On hypothetically reconstructed actions and free interpretation (159). 5.9. Summary (164). Inferencing towards text organization. 6.1. Introduction (166). 6.2. On referential connectedness (168). 6.3. On coreference (172). 6.4. On cohesion (174). 6.5. On the cotext integrativity condition (177). 6.6. On interpretative elaboration and coherence (178). 6.7. On the indispensability of coherence (183). 6.8. On the indispensability of ILRRR-related inferences (186). 6.9. Summary (188). On interpretative elaboration. 7.1. Introduction (191). 7.2. On the two sides of interpersonal communication (192). 7.3. On low-level and high-level coherence (194). 7.4. On producer-oriented explicative interpretation (196). 7.5. On receiver-oriented evaluative interpretation (200). 7.6. On some problem areas of literary evaluation (103). 7.7. On meaning transformation (206). 7.8. On meaning complementation (209). 7.9. On the justification and plausibility of meaning complementation (212). 7.10. On the incompleteness/infiniteness of interpretation (214). 7.11. Summary (215). Interpretation, inferencing and illusion. 8.1. Introduction (217). 8.2. On some illusory facets of dream interpretation (219). 8.3. On some illusory facets of interpreting spatial data (223). 8.4. On some illusory facets of interpreting deictic data (225). 8.5. On some illusory facets of interpreting unimedial data (227). 8.6. On the illusion of interpersonal/(cross-)cultural understanding (229). 8.7. On the illusion of correctness and completeness in interpretation (231). 8.8. On the illusion of orthodox mono-interpretability (234). 8.9. On some illusion in the cognitive models (236). 8.10. On scepticism and caution in exegetic practice (239). 8.10.1. On rule-conformity (239). 8.10.2. On rule-conformity and correctness (241). 8.10.3. On the relative character of rationality (242). 8.10.4. On rational control and correctness (243). 8.10.5. What is ideal? (245). 8.10.6. On scepticism (245). 8.10.7. On relativism (246). 8.11. Summary (247). Inferences in Alice in Wonderland. 9.1. Introduction (249). 9.2. Inferences as relating activities (251). 9.3. Inferences in hypothesis construction/evaluation (253). 9.4. On discourse-directed inferences AAW (255). 9.5. On conditionals and textual organization (259). 9.6. On classification and textual organization (262). 9.7. On inferential elaboration (266). 9.8.
